ANGLER'S CORNER

By Roger Hare

Well, here we are in the last week of our summer before the schools reopen and a lot of fishing is curtailed.

The bluefish are still with us, and three of our younger anglers found them last week about a quarter of a mile off Rexhame Beach. David De-Castro, Janet Welch and Greg Wheeler were trolling umbrella rigs and Goo Goo Eyed plugs along Rexhame Beach when they ran into a school of big blues. Janet Walch caught her first blue ever and it turned out to weigh 17 pounds. She wasn't at all prepared for the fight that fish gave. In all they caught nine nice big bluefish.

There are bluefish all along our coast, and the trick is to be there when they come along. As I wrote last week, a school is still holding in at the entrance to Duxbury Bay and you can catch blues around the Bug Light. Most of the sport-fishermen that catch a lot of bluefish are spending their time on the tuna grounds trying to catch one of those giant bluefin tuna. Those killer whales ate or frightened off the tuna from the South West corner of Stellwagen Bank so a lot of the boats have moved up to the North West corner near Gloucester.

There are some tuna being caught in our corner of the bank. One day last week, out of about 18 boats, there were seven hook ups and three giant blue fins were boated. On Saturday, Don Hebert on White Lady caught a 750 pound fish.

The flounder fishing has been rather slow, but cooler weather will bring them back. Recently John and Pat Cooley of Marshfield were fishing with Marshall and Janet Litchfield of Scituate in the North River. Everyone was catching flounder except John, who was using his old fresh water spinning rod and reel. Finally on the very last piece of sea worm, John caught the biggest flounder he had ever seen. It was a door mat size and bent his fresh water rod over double to bring it in.

The striped bass fishing slowed considerably last week, but that too will pick up again as we get cooler weather in September. There are some big stripers around but you will have to work to get them. Live pogies are the best bet, and some good places are off the rocks at Cohasset, Third Cliff in Scituate, and Duxbury Bay in Duxbury. Using live pogies in these areas will probably result in having your bait fish catching a large bluefish, or worse yet just having it chopped up by blues. Use a wire leader and hook the bait fish in the tail, using either a single hook or a treble. Bluefish usually attack the bait fish from the tail, while bass swallow their fish head first. With the pogie hooked in the tail, you will have a good chance to catch either a blue or a bass. Just in case it is a bass that takes the pogie, don't try to set the hook too soon or you will just get back a dead pogie. Give the bass a chance to swallow that whole bait fish so your hook is deep in the striper's mouth.

I finally got moved and went out fishing on Saturday with Rob Milardo and Danny Way. We found bluefish out near the tuna fishermen on our corner of Stellwagen Bank. Hundreds of birds showed us the way to the blues, and they were breaking out of the water all around us. There were several schools that moved rapidly, but each time huge flocks of gulls and terns hovered over the bluefish. We caught 14 in all most of which weighed 12 to 14 pounds each, and we caught them on swimming Rapalas and Rebel plugs.

Call me with those fishing reports, I have my phone connected again, at 834-9337.
